YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio - The Valley's near double digit unemployment figures were evident on thursday at the annual Penn-Ohio Interstate Job.

The areas largest job fair attracted hundreds to the Covelli Centre.

In the crowd of job-seekers, the primary goal for most was just the opportunity to get back to work and earn a paycheck.

Sevens months after losing her job with a company after 20 years, Beulah Page is putting her resume in as many hands as possible, hoping for a new opportunity. "A new start, a fresh start, so somewhere in here is my job", said Page.

Dustin Rubosky has been job hunting since he was laid off from a good job in Cleveland nine months ago. "Part time or full time, I've been looking. Anything to pay the bills", Robosky said.

Ohio One Stop says for a growing number of people the problem is under-employment. Spokesperson Mary Ann Kochalko says, "We find a lot of people who have either run out of unemployment and take a part time job or just take a part time job and they're still looking for a full time job. We'd like to help those people find full time, sustainable employment."

In today's job market, employment experts say job seekers need to think about what they can do to make themselves more employable. Bert Cene is Director of the Mahoning-Columbiana Job Training Association, "People need to continue to look at enhancing their skill levels, because there's a lot of competition out there today."

More than 70 employers and two dozen job training providers took part in this years Ohio-Penn Job Expo.
